

Moraga Mediator Making Peace in the Community

By Sophie Braccini

Larry Beans in his Moraga home.

Photo Sophie Braccini

On any given weekday, you may find six people – two couples who live next to each other and two mediators from the Center for Human Development – sitting around an oval table in a quiet room. One of the six just might be Larry Beans of Moraga, a seasoned mediator who started practicing for the CHD more than 20 years ago.

Beans and his colleagues regularly find resolution and peace where there once was only dissent and anger, whatever the dispute – a fight over an obnoxious barking dog, or the growth of a row of trees that have begun to obstruct the view of one of the parties. Sometimes the parties involved in a dispute still talk to each other. Sometimes they can't bear to be in the same room.

Mediation is a voluntary process, Beans explains. "One party initiates the process by calling the CHD," he says. Someone in the office conducts an intake interview to evaluate if the topic is something that could be resolved through mediation. Then they contact the other party to see if they will agree to mediation.

"We ask people to commit to three hours," says Beans. "We start by giving an overview of what we are going to do, and we set the ground rules, asking people to agree to stay civil during the process. We explain that we are not judges and that they will be in charge of the agreement they will come up with."

Beans remembers one case where three sisters were disputing who was going to be in charge of their mother's burial. "At some point, one of the parties bolted out of the room and my partner ran after them and was able to get them to come back," he remembers. Ultimately, an agreement was found that the three parties signed.

Beans started 20 years ago after participating in a 40-hour training program. "I remember how impressed I was by the quality of the people I met. Some of them had mediated for years," remembers Beans. Then he was paired with a partner and started mediating local disputes. "I started with resolving disputes between neighbors (community mediation); then I started guardianship mediation," he says.

One of the keys to successful mediation, Beans says, is listening closely to each party, reiterating what he has heard them say, and digging for the details and the emotional roots of the issue. "We try to get to the emotions behind the scenes and explore them. We try to help them overcome the dynamics and the feelings. If you don't help them enough with their emotions, whatever solution is found may not be long lasting," he says, noting that community mediation has a 75 percent success rate. "At some point we try to get them to talk to each other, and explore how to continue to communicate," he says.

Beans is now mostly doing guardianship mediation.

"It is a court matter, but the judge requires that the family goes to mediation first to work out their differences," Beans explains. He says grandparents often initiate the procedure when they see parents unable to take care of the kids. "A teenager once came to mediation (teens over 14 can be part of the process), asking to go back to live with his uncle in Missouri instead of staying with his separated parents who both wanted him, but were constantly fighting," he remembers. The parents were not able to resolve their difficulties and the young man went to live with his uncle.

Over the years, Beans says that he has developed his ability to listen and that his laid-back personality has helped. "We've had situations where at the end of the mediation the parties might get up and give each other a hug. That's a real success sign," he says with a smile.

Beans participates in one to two mediations a month.

"I do this to improve the relationships in the community," he says. "If we can be a little more understanding, maybe it will make a difference in the world eventually. And it affects kids' lives. If you can work out something for them, then those kids have a better chance."

The Center for Human Development is offering a 30-hour community mediation training course starting April 23. For more information, visit <http://chdprevent.server283.com/>.

Miramonte Vandalism May Be Related to Moraga Incidents

By Chris Lavin

Miramonte High School principal Julie Parks points to boarded windows that were recently broken by vandals at the school.

Vandals recently broke bird guards and PVC piping at the Miramonte garden. Photos Andy Scheck

Vandalism to schools and other public places is not a common occurrence in Lamorinda, but this month turned out to be a bit of an exception. Twenty windows were broken at Orinda's Miramonte High School on three different nights between March 7 and March 14, while some businesses and signs in Moraga were also damaged in the same time period.

"We have reason to believe (all the incidents) might be related," said Orinda Police Chief Mark Nagel. "Moraga police are investigating as well, and we're working together."

Helping the investigation is the use of surveillance camera footage in several locations, Nagel said. At Miramonte, a camera on the roof pointed directly at the damaged area, which included the badly trampled portion of the school community garden, said Miramonte Principal Julie Parks. The broken windows were in the science, arts and math wing, as well as one in the administrative offices.

No rocks were found in the area, "so we think someone was probably using a baseball bat or a skateboard to break the glass," said Parks. Because the glass in the windows is old – before tempered glass was typically used for public buildings – several classes had to be moved because of glass shards on the floor.

"What's really sad is the trampling of the garden," Parks said. "The students don't have that much time to work on it in the first place, because they are so busy, so this really sets them back." All the bird guards and PVC piping used to protect the gardens was broken, and seedlings and plants were trampled.

"Mainly, the students are really disappointed," Parks said. "This is a violation of their space."

Submit stories and story ideas to storydesk@lamorindaweekly.com

Celebrate the launch of LAMORINDA Village neighborhood support for aging in our community...

Monday, the 6th of April
From 2:00–3:30 p.m.

LAFAYETTE ORINDA
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH
Fellowship Hall
49 KNOX DRIVE
LAFAYETTE, CALIFORNIA

Light refreshments will be served.

Lamorinda Village is a local nonprofit enabling residents to age in their own homes by facilitating access to services and community connections.

www.LamorindaVillage.org
925 253-2300

MORAGA VALLEY SWIM & TENNIS CLUB

Come Join the Fun!

Open House
APRIL 11
3:00-5:00 pm

- NEW! Clay Tennis Courts
- 6 Lanes for lap swimming, dive tank, baby pool and expansive green space
- Learn-to-Swim lessons and Masters program
- MVP Marlins Swim Team
- Year-round adult and junior tennis programs with USPTA certified coaches

Memberships Available for the 2015 Season

Visit moragavalleypool.org or email: membership@moragavalleypool.org

Swim Team Registration Now Open!