

Students Look to the World, Not Just Across the Street

Teenagers sometimes wear blinders. It's easy to do: There are social events, homework, learning to drive, figuring out college applications, part-time jobs. But there is an expanding group of students who have cast their eyes more globally. They are participating in Global Student Embassy (GSE), a high school club at all three Lamorinda high schools that encourages travel to what is still the Third World.

Kind of a mini-Peace Corps. "We mainly focus on eco-action and environmentally sustainable agriculture," said Sarah Firth, who participates in the program at Campolindo High School. That sounds like a mouthful coming from a teen. But Firth quickly launches into fine details. "The goal is to develop a relationship with the environment, gardens, and learning sustainable gardening techniques."

In GSE, students meet other students their own age in countries like Nicaragua and learn how the families they visit grow or get their own food, then they bring what they learn back home.

"The program is getting bigger and bigger," said Chrissy Orangio, who is based in Contra Costa County and is the program coordinator for Northern California. And the relationships that students form can become reciprocal. Last year seven students from Central America visited the students they met on visits to their own countries.

That means a lot of fundraising. Central Americans can seldom afford travel to Northern California, and Lamorinda students spend a lot of time fundraising for their own expenses.

"After traveling with GSE to Nicaragua my freshman year I saw the impact that such a small group can have on a community and the impact the community there could have on us," said Shelly Block of Campolindo. "The best part of Global Student Embassy's exchange program in my opinion is that we collaborate with students from other countries rather than act as if the United States has everything figured out perfectly."

Chloe Bouchy's biggest take-home was seeing that they could grow food at the school garden and have White Pony Express – the local nonprofit that collects food for area food banks – come and pick up the produce for people who can't afford it.

"Being part of GSE has changed the way I look at life," Bouchy said. "Working in the Campolindo Garden has been an especially eye-opening experience for me because I get to see actual food being grown before my eyes. We go to the super market to buy fruits and vegetables; it isn't common for people to take a moment to wonder how this produce came to be, already grown and ready to purchase." Orangio expects the program at all three high schools to continue to grow this year.

"It's a deep cultural experience," said Firth, who just headed for Boston University. "It's giving students a different perspective."

Thinking that the footlocker was a salable item, Knapp accepted the offer. "I sold $200 worth [of the silverware] that day, then the same the following week," he muses, and a business was born.

Over the years he has developed an immense knowledge of silverware patterns, and he can probably replace that teaspoon you misplaced from Aunt Ruth's heirloom silver if you can show him a piece of the same pattern. He also sells flatware to startup and established restaurants, and has about 15 regular restaurant customers to supply.

And what about those miniature replica silverware pins that dangle from Knapp's signature vest? "Between 1900 and the Depression, girls usually got married when they graduated from high school. The local jeweler would bestow these little pins on the girls as graduation gifts," he explains, with a not-so-subtle reminder that the jeweler carried that pattern in his store. The girls wore the pins on their sweaters, a set of the silverware would become a graduation gift (this was before the days of gift registries), and the hopeful bride-to-be would find one of the pins attached inside the case as well.
