Orinda urges residents to plan for longer blackouts

By Sora O'Doherty

Orinda has released a guide to assist residents in planning for potential two- to five-day PG&E shutoffs. Because most of Orinda has been designated by the California Public Utilities Commission as "elevated" (Tier Two) or "extreme" (Tier Three) risk for wildfire, it is highly likely that PG&E may find it necessary to turn off the electricity as part of a Public Safety Power Shutoff. Due to the length of a potential power shutoff, residents should take precautionary measures to prepare for this potential eventuality.

PG&E has announced that their PSPS program will include all electric lines that pass through high fire-threat areas, including Orinda and nearby communities, as a precautionary measure intended to help reduce the risk of wildfire in the Bay Area. A PPS is likely to occur during extreme weather conditions, such as during low humidity levels, forecasted sustained winds above 25 mph, conditions of dry fuel, a red flag warning from the National Weather service, and on-the-ground, real-time observations.

Peak wildfire conditions occur in September and October, and according to the materials prepared by the city, PG&E is constantly monitoring weather conditions to determine wildfire threat. For Orinda, the primary threat of a wildfire comes in from Briones Regional Park, where wildfire danger results from strong Diablo winds mixed with low humidity levels in the fall months.

OUSD receives $10K for wildfire mitigation efforts

Kyle McKibbin, Keenan, Account Executive for East Bay Schools Insurance Group, presents a $10,000 check to the Orinda Union School District board of trustees. The check from the Northern California Regional Liability Excess Fund is in recognition of the school district's efforts to implement innovative wildfire mitigation and extinguishing techniques by purchasing and installing two 10,000-gallon water storage tanks at Wagner Ranch and Sleepy Hollow elementary schools.
